Conversational Propaganda

Step One

Establish some kind of rapport with the audience. Find something you have in common. Ethnic or regional identity. Profession. Shared interest in history or politics or philosophy. Anything.

Step Two

Tell an interesting story. In a neutral fashion. Say the story comes from a book or conversation. Perhaps comment that you do not know whether or not the story is true. Nonetheless, the story is interesting.

Step Three

Give the impression that you are reasonable, objective, knowledgeable, and - most important (!) - interesting! People should enjoy the conversation. Not feel like they are hearing a boring lecture or sermon or sales pitch.

Interest = Entertainment = Positive Emotion

This positive feeling alone makes them like you. They are more receptive. And more open about their own thoughts and feelings. This gives you feedback. Helps you adjust your approach.

The first impression should be that you are a source of fascinating facts. Not an obvious "Nazi sympathizer."

Even if you later reveal yourself to be a National Socialist, remember that the objective is not to convert and recruit them immediately.

The initial objective is to convince them that National Socialists are decent and rational human beings. And that logic and common sense are on our side.

We are not the raving lunatics the media portrays. (Unless there is a full moon.)

This approach works well for the two most common topics: World War Two and present-day problems.

Consider this: While sitting in a prison cell in Germany, I read an article in the German news magazine Der Spiegel that made me laugh out loud. And grin from ear to ear.

The mayor of my small town described me as a “model citizen!”

Part Seven Therapy

Even science fiction publishers reject manuscripts based on researcher conversations.

However, mental health professionals appreciate my notes!

Putting lunatics to work is therapeutic!

Makes economic sense.

And is definitely better than the traditional treatment: government jobs!

One researcher was told that he had not been born. His engineer father had built him in his laboratory. The parts included the head of a war criminal, the body of a monster, and the feet of a Norwegian skier. (Skis included.) His mother disputed this. But he was too young to remember. So there was still an element of doubt.

Another researcher claimed to be a robot boy. His computer-like brain made this difficult to disprove. He became a computer expert. And worked on “artificial intelligence.”

The biggest challenge is the managers.

The traditional treatment for people who are too stupid to do any real work – but too honest for politics (!) – is to put them in management.

Unfortunately, the wisdom of putting lunatics in charge of an insane asylum has been questioned. (Despite the obvious logic.)

The executives do not want to lose their jobs!

Or be officially classified as insane. (Unofficially is tolerable.) Actual sanity or insanity does not play a role.

Not surprisingly, our facility has an impressive medical staff!

Interview with Molly
Part Three

NSK: Your current projects are obviously philosophical and art related.

Please describe your views on the impact of such topics in politics.

Molly: Well I try to still update the photo gallery, but mostly I've been concentrating on Adolf Hitler and the Army of Mankind (www.mouvingthecentury.com/truth.htm). I'm at 21 pages now, and I have so much more to do. Studying WWII is an absolute minefield of information. You seek out information on one thing and find two more things to research. It feels a bit like you are an archeologist, unearthing the buried past. A past that they would rather not be brought to light. We can thank the internet again for the flood of information and pictures. Extremely rare stuff has
